Background

The shea tree is native to Africa. Shea trees bear fruit once annually after they are approximately 20 years old. The fruit of the shea tree is also referred to as a nut. Africans have traditionally referred to the trees as God's gift to Africa because of their long, 300-year lifespan and the rich, highly nourishing butter that they yield.

Most shea butter that is commercially available is produced in West Africa. West African Shea Butter is typically produced by crude, inferior methods. West African Shea Butter tends to have a hard texture and distinctive odor that can be detected in the finished product.

Nilotica Shea Butter (Vitellaria nilotica), however, is produced in Northern Uganda and is far superior in texture, nutritive value and aroma. Nilotica Shea Butter offers a significantly higher content of olein, a glyceride of oleic acid. Nilotica Shea Butter, therefore, is softer and creamier than West African Shea Butter, and it is more readily absorbed into the skin and hair. Nilotica Shea Butter also possesses a lighter, more pleasant aroma than West African Shea Butter.

Although the political climate of Uganda makes the sourcing of Nilotica Shea Butter difficult, Natural Sourcing is able to provide this superior quality butter sourced in a manner that fully protects the valuable shea trees. Our procurement methods also support the economic growth of the region's tribes.

Natural Sourcing's Organic Nilotica Shea Butter is 100% natural. It is produced in a manner that uses newly developed technology to carefully process the butter without the use of chemicals.
